COVINA VALLEY SAVINGS BANK
(THE ASSOCIATED BANKS)MASONIC FRATERNITY
OPENS NEW TEMPLE

Masonic and Eastern Star members numbering 700, the largest gathering of these fraternal organizations in the history of the square and compass in the San Gabriel valley, participated in the opening of the completed Masonic temple at the corner of Orange and Second streets Wednesday evening, erecting another milestone in the steady progress of this fraternity in Southern California.

In this two-story building, set upon ground 177 by 100 feet, with the structure 74 by 80 feet in outside dimensions, the Masons and their families from Pomona, San Dimas, La Verne, Glendora, Monrovia, Puente, Azusa, Alhambra, and intervening territory, assembled to celebrate a triumph of Masonic spirit which has provided one of the best temples to be found in Southern California. The exercises were informal in nature and did not partake of the impressiveness of a dedication, a ceremony which will not be held until some time next November. The cost of the building is set at $30,000, including the grounds and the exquisite furnishings, and the amount has been pledged by the Masons of the valley, conjoining with the Knights Templar, Eastern Star and other affiliated Masonic bodies.

Worshipful Master Ed Blanchard introduced A. R. Bryan as master of ceremonies, and a program was enjoyed in the beautiful lodge-room. The exercises opened with the singing of America, after which a number of scenes were shown with the new motion picture machine which is to be a part of the entertainments of the future and also of lodge work. Vocal solos were excellently rendered by Mrs. Charlotte White, accompanied at piano by Miss Emogene Arthur, and other exceptionally pleasing vocal numbers were given by J. D. Coles, accompanied by Mrs. Coles. A feature of the evening was the participation by the children of the Masonic Home, beginning with a musical reading of one of James Whitcomb Riley's poems by Headley Pasco. A chorus number was pleasingly rendered by the children, and another acceptable number was that of a violin solo by Elmer King, also of the home. The children made a distinct hit with a burlesque, entitled "The Builder's Club Will Hold a Meeting." This was especially enjoyed by members of the Eastern Star.

The dance in the ball-room began early in order to entertain the overflow crowd that was unable to find seats in the lodge-room. For two hours the people enjoyed the dancing on the fine hardwood floor. The billiard room was filled with men, who predict that this place of recreation will continue to grow in popularity. Punch was served all during the affair by the younger members of the Eastern Star.

Informal inspection of the building was held under the direction of the local members of the lodge and Eastern Star. The lodge-room is richly furnished in mahogany and mulberry velvet, with built-in leather settees running the length of the room. Much favorable comment was elicited because of the beautiful painting effects, which are the work of S. E. Coons, a local lodge member. Perhaps the most exquisitely equipped room in the building is the ladies' rest room which has been furnished by the Eastern Star. The high windows are daintily clouded with silk curtains, and the furniture is mahogany-colored reed upholstered in mulberry. An exquisite floor lamp lends harmony to the furnishings scheme. Throughout the building the floors are heavily carpeted.

While no dignitaries of the order were given special invitation there were many present who have risen high in the estimation of the order. Preparations are to be made toward the formal dedication of this structure at a date to be announced.

One of the most pleasing features on the evening's entertainment was the demonstration on the Ampico by Mr. Cline, the popular representative of the local music house, A. F. Tanner & Co.

MELTED LEAD WEATHER
IN EAST, SAYS INSLEY

Edward Insley, one of the editors of the Los Angeles Examiner, whose home and ranch is on East Puente and Baranca streets, has returned from three weeks spent in the east, associating business with visits to old friends.

Mr. Insley, who for years was connected with many large daily papers in the east, said yesterday in paraphrase that he would rather be a doorkeeper in Southern California than to sit in the seats of the perspiring mighty in the east.

It was terrifically hot and humid in Chicago, he said. All the east coast is afflicted with the most terrible heat-wave of years, and there are many prostrations, he stated. Nights are so hot it is like trying to sleep over a stereotyping kettle.

"My little brown home in the west greeted me with its soothing opportunities for a cool night of sleep," said the editor. "I am glad of the privilege of going back east once in a while. There are a lot of people left back there yet, although I don't know why. I have told the most of them they shouldn't live back there. But a visit to the east coast in June and July gives one the comparison necessary to appreciate what we have here."

METHODIST MINISTER WILL

The community service held each Sunday evening at 8 o'clock on the high school campus will be addressed by Rev. W. C. Geyer, pastor of the Methodist church, on Sunday evening, and the Methodist choir will furnish the music.

GOVERNOR RECOMMENDS
COVINA MAN FOR JUDGE

The name of Thomas B. Reed of Covina is included in a list of candidates for the three newly created positions on the superior court bench of Los Angeles county, given by Gov. Stephens in a letter to the Los Angeles Bar association. The governor indicated that he would appoint the candidates selected by the bar association.

It has not been definitely decided whether the three new judges are to be located in Los Angeles or whether one will be placed in Long Beach and another at Pomona.

Mr. Reed says that the submission of his name by the governor was a decided surprise to him as he had taken no action toward obtaining the appointment.

Mr. Reed was elected at the last election to the position of justice of the peace of Covina township. He has been practicing law in Covina and in Los Angeles, with offices in the Trust and Savings building at the latter place.

Of the twenty judges of the superior court in this county, there are none from the eastern portion of the county and Mr. Reed's friends are hoping that he may secure one of the appointments. The position carries a salary of $7,500 a year.

FARM CENTER HEADS
SEE CANYON DAMSITE

That there is a continued interest in the project to build a great retaining dam in the San Gabriel canyon is shown through the fact that representatives of the farm centers connected with the Los Angeles county farm bureau, visited the canyon on Saturday and Sunday last, and thoroughly inspected the site where it is proposed that the retention wall be built.

Among those from the immediate valley who accompanied Engineer J. W. Reagan of the Los Angeles county flood control office were Robert H. Neely, president of the county farm bureau; W. S. Sawyer, director of the West Covina farm center; C. D. Griffith, vice-president of the Covina farm center; J. A. Myers, civil engineer, and W. A. Jones, director of the Azusa-Glendora farm center.

The party was entertained at Follows camp and remained over night at Camp Edwards. The necessity of this project was pointed out by the director of Engineer Reagan, who is the official most interested in bringing this project before the people of the county.

President Neely, in commenting on the project, said that the time must eventually come when the storm-waters of this great canyon will be controlled and the water conserved for use in irrigating and for power. Flood waters in the past, he said, had done much more damage to the crops, the land and to settlements than the cost of such a dam would be.

Other members of the party, all of whom are familiar with the wild vagaries of the San Gabriel river at flood time, expressed themselves as highly interested in the idea to build this dam.

LOCAL BANK RESOURCES
INDICATE PROSPERITY

The combined assets of the First National Bank of Covina and the Covina Valley Savings Bank, the latter an associated institution, is announced this week as $1,483,294.67.

The combined deposits of these institutions amount to $1,249,784.79, and the combined capital, surplus and profits are $209,409.88.

The total resources of the Covina National Bank amount to $490,454.74, with deposits to $368,243.09. The combined strength of the two Covina banks is $1,974,248.41.

The deposits, according to an announcement by the local officials, are greater than at the time of the last call of the comptroller of the currency.

KANSAS EDUCATOR HERE.

Mr. Kingman is one of the best-known educators of the Sunflower state. The party came by train, and will devote the summer to recreation in the Southland. Mrs. Jaggard is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Norton.

MRS. MARGARET BUSH
DIES AT MONROVIA

After a long period of failing health, which had to some extent been caused by injuries received in an automobile accident in Covina about a year ago, Mrs. Margaret Bush, venerable mother of Mrs. H. A. Seaman, formerly of West Covina, died last Friday at the Monrovia hospital.

For some time Mrs. Bush lived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George M. Jennings, and was under treatment for several months. She had many friends in this valley, including the membership of the Methodist church, where she was present at services when able to attend.

The funeral was held from the Drake Service Parlors in Monrovia, and burial was made in Hollywood.

CAR CLIMBS SIDEWALK AND SMASHES WINDOW

Confusing the gas throttle with the brake is said to have been the cause of an automobile attempting to enter the shoe store of George Simeonoff on Monday of this week.

Mrs. Cora B. Moore of 236 Italia street was driving the machine, and in approaching the curb failed to check the car. The machine smashed the store's plate glass window, and one fender of the car was badly crumpled. Mrs. Moore was not injured.

Citizens, Soldiers and Soldier-Citizens
Honor Capt. Douglas in Life and Death

In the valley he loved so well, where dwell his own loved ones and the friends of his youth and manhood, the body of Captain Howard T. Douglas was laid beneath the greenward near a giant liveoak in Oakdale cemetery Tuesday afternoon, while a great throng of citizens and fellow soldiers-in-arms participated in the beautiful ceremony.

The valley's most distinguished soldier, whose record in the world-war and afterwards, tempts the historian to say that he indeed was California's most valuable single contribution to the great conflict, lost his life by drowning in a collision of airplanes over Chesapeake bay during bombing practice on June 22, and his body was not officially recovered from the water until July first.

Covina, Azusa and Glendora cities joined in a memorial holiday on Tuesday during the hours of the obsequies, with churches participating, and with the regular army fields of Southern California aiding the local post of the Chaplain Richard W. Gentry. The marching men entered trucks and automobiles at the outskirts of the city and headed the long procession that proceeded to Oakdale cemetery. The band played a funeral march on entering the burial ground.

TRIBUTES FROM THE AIR.

Here, as the soldiers and citizens assembled about the grave in the shade of a beautiful liveoak, the American Legion began its impressive ritual, under the direction of Commander Stafford. As the services proceeded there came the hum of approaching airplanes, and far above the heads of the multitude a squadron of airmen from March field circled, so that in this last moment, as the ashes were being consigned to dust, this heroic aviator was surrounded by the whirr of pulsing planes, the music to which his jubilant soul had reacted all during those dangerous days of endeavor on America's battle front.

Chaplain Thomason delivered the

CAPTAIN HOWARD T. DOUGLAS

American Legion in the ritualistic ceremony at the graveside. Legionnaires, under the direction of Irvan G. Reynolds, chairman of the executive committee, arranged honors for their friend and comrade.

Arriving on Monday morning, accompanied by the father, Summerfield Douglas, and the brother, former Lieutenant Gordon C. Douglas, the remains lay in a sealed military casket at the Custer undertaking parlors. At 2:30 o'clock of Tuesday the body was placed in state in the First Methodist church, enfolded in the flag, and surrounded by masses of floral tributes, the greater portion of which were from intimate friends of the San Gabriel valley, but with exquisite remembrances contributed by the air service at Washington, by Alaskan friends, and by the fraternity houses of the university of California, of which he was a graduate.

OVERFLOWING CHURCH.

Within the edifice gathered as many people of the valley as could gain entrance, while the street outside was filled with hundreds of sincere mourners. In places of honor were the men and officers of the March field platoon, brother aviators who had come to wave him a farewell in this last, long flight. American Legion men, many of whom had enlisted with him months before the declaration of war also occupied places of honor, and the bond that binds all men who have answered the call was evident in the presence of that last outpost from the battlefields of the Civil War, the veterans, who with that unquenchable spirit of patriotism that has ever characterized them, were grouped around their glowing standard. With them were the members of the Woman's Relief Corps who are closing up the ranks of the great army of the rebellion. Schopann's funeral march was played by Mrs. R. T. Chew as relatives and comrades-in-arms assembled.

On the platform were ministers of Covina, Rev. W. C. Geyer of the Methodist church; Rev. Crowell D. Eddy of the Baptist church; Rev. Edward Williams of the Presbyterian church, and Rev. F. B. Cowgill, former Methodist pastor, a personal friend of the dead aviator, who delivered the funeral oration. Prayer and scripture readings were offered by the ministers. The church choir rendered the hymn, "O, Love That Will Not Let Me Go." Mrs. Blanche Marshall of the Presbyterian choir sang two numbers, "Over the Stars There Is Rest," and "He Giveth His Beloved Sleep."

MILITARY CORTEGE.

At the termination of the church funeral the band from the base of coast defense at Fort McArthur, which is the original branch of the service that Captain Douglas entered prior to the declaration of war, headed the cortege that moved through the main streets toward the cemetery, playing a funeral dirge. The casket was guarded by the March field platoon under command of Lieut. Frye. The pall-bearers were American Legionnaires and army and navy officers, who were, ex-Lieutenants Bort and Marvin Warren of Glendora; ex-Lieut. Wallace A. Reed of Covina; ex-Lieut. Hoyt Leisure of the navy; ex-Lieut. Earl Phillee, and Lieut. Corliss Mosely of the air service staff at Washington, the latter a roommate of the dead captain who had accompanied the body from Washington as a representative of General Menoher, chief of air service.

American Legion men followed, headed by Commander Dailey S. Stafford, Chaplain Dale Thomason and ex-Army prayer in behalf of the comrades of the local post and for the post at Nome, Alaska, of which the dead captain was a life-member, an honor accorded him during the time when he was the successful pathfinder for the squadron of planes that flew from Washington into the Alaskan wilds. Former Army Chaplain Gentry delivered the eulogy, thrilling his auditors with his allusions to the record of the aviator, a statement of which appears on another page.

The rendition of the Star Spangled Banner by the band, and salute to the flag as it rose from half-mast to the peak was one of the thrilling moments of the observances.

Following the age-old custom that dates back to crossed spears and shields, the platoon from March field formed a double firing line over the grave, and God's acre rang with the salute of rifles. The bugler brought the ceremony to a close with "taps."

SHOWER OF BLOOMS.

With the signal taken from the firing squad's salute the soaring planes drew nearer and swooped down into the cemetery, and as they passed over the burial plot a rain of carnations and shasta daisies fell, scattered from the hands of those brother cloud-fellows of his, who knew of his exploits for his country, and admired him greatly.

One after another in rapid succession, planes darted into the burial ground, just above the tops of the trees, sowing their tributes, an observance that thrilled the people as perhaps no other thing may have thrilled them during the remarkable observance. Aviator comrades had also dropped flowers over Chesapeake bay a few days after the fatal accident, led by Brig-Gen. Mitchell, at a time when it was

CITRUS INSTITUTE IS ATTENDED BY RANCHERS

The biggest activities of the year were discussed at the citrus institute and the fourth annual fumigation and pest control school held at Whittier on Friday and Saturday, June 24 and 25. At the citrus institute 350 persons were in attendance, and on Saturday at the fumigation school it is estimated that 500 persons were present.

The main subject of the institute program was that of reducing costs of production, the various factors entering into reduction of production costs being discussed by the best posted men in the business. A feature of the day was a splendid address delivered by President C. C. Teague of the California Fruit Growers Exchange, discussing the effect of high freight rates on the citrus industry and reviewing the work which the California citrus league has been doing in an effort to have freight rates reduced.

HIGH ACRE YIELDS.

The big lesson of the day was the emphasizing of the importance of high yields per acre, thereby reducing per box costs of production, as against purely arbitrary reductions in per acre costs. It was pointed out that it frequently pays better to spend more money for care of the orchard, thereby increasing the yield and decreasing the individual cost per box than by cutting down on essentials and greatly decreasing the yield. A feature of the program was the banquet held at the woman's club house, at which more than 100 persons were present, following which G. Harold Powell, general manager of the California Fruit Growers Exchange, delivered a splendid address, pointing out the unique situation which the citrus and walnut industries now occupy, as contrasted with practically every other important branch of agriculture, and showing how this position is due entirely to intelligent merchandising methods whereby the associations are financing the distribution of their own products instead of calling on buyers to do this for them.

FUMIGATION PROBLEMS.

An outstanding feature of the fumigation and pest control school was the candid admission of unsatisfactory results with the use of the liquid gas fumigation method the San Gabriel and Pomona valleys and the statement that these results seem to be due somewhat to faulty methods of use but more likely to an increase in resistance on the part of black scale in these districts.

It was stated, however, that the use of gas tight tents will likely solve this problem in addition to reducing costs of fumigation. There was a general agreement that spraying for the control of scale while occasionally effective, is on the average not as satisfactory as fumigation.

It was also generally agreed that in the coast districts spraying or dusting for red spider control usually aggravates the nuisance instead of abating it, resulting in a disturbance in the balance existing between natural insect enemies and the spider, which if undisturbed, almost invariably results in their satisfactory control without any treatment whatever.

For the interior districts it was suggested that more attention should be given to determining the presence or absence of insect predators feeding on the spider, spraying or dusting to be governed by their presence or absence.

WALNUT GROWERS URGE INCREASE IN TARIFF

Statewide dissatisfaction over the low protective tariff placed on California walnuts by the house ways and means committee has caused thousands of walnut growers to deluge California congressmen and senators with telegrams protesting against the Fordney emergency tariff bill.

Congressmen Osborne, Swing, Linberger and Frew from the southern part of the state and Senators Johnson and Shortridge are receiving hundreds of telegrams from walnut growers, asking them to insist upon an immediate revision of the walnut tariff in order to save a $100,000,000 horticultural industry from ruin.

C. C. Teague, president of the California Walnut Growers' Association, who appeared before the ways and means committee to set forth the facts regarding the necessity for an adequate protective tariff on walnuts, has telegraphed to Congressman Linberger, asking him to urge an amendment which will afford a tariff of four cents per pound on unshelled and twelve cents per pound on shelled walnuts. The Fordney bill only provides for a tariff of two and one-half cents on unshelled and five cents on shelled walnuts.

It has been pointed out by Mr. Teague that the Fordney bill does not even give the walnut growers of California a tariff equal to that of the old Payne-Aldrich bill, which was considered too low.

LARGE GATHERING WITNESS INSTALLATION OF REBEKAHS

Thursday of last week was a notable day in the history of Covina Rebekah lodge when a large gathering of the order from all over Southern California met here to witness the installation of the newly elected officers for the ensuing term.

The installation was in charge of Mrs. Grace Thompson, district deputy president, assisted by Mrs. Morgan, deputy marshal, and a staff of officers from the Azusa lodge. The newly installed officers are: Past noble grand, Mrs. Madeline Kohler; noble grand, Mrs. May Drendel; vice grand, Mrs. Emma Knorr; secretary, Mrs. Alice Burpee; treasurer, Mrs. Anna Willoughby; warden, Miss Maud Blackman; conductress, Mrs. Elsie Crusey; chaplain, Mrs. Maisie Coolman; inside guardian, Mrs. Nellie McKee; outside guardian, Otis Keeling; R. S. to N. G., Mrs. Nettie Ferber; L. S. to N. G., Mrs. S. L. Spencer; R. S. to V. G., Mrs. Milton Armel; L. S. to V. G., Mrs. Emma Ohaver.

Following these large and impressive ceremonies dinner was served in the banquet room, followed by speeches from prominent Oddfellows present.

OVER 100 CHILDREN ATTEND VACATION BIBLE SCHOOL.

There are now 146 children enrolled in the daily vacation Bible school, and the daily attendance is high, in spite of vacation interruptions. Enthusiasm over the work is ever increasing among the children.

The movement is general throughout Southern California. There are now 15,000 children attending daily vacation Bible schools in this section of the state. The educators of the country are watching the movement closely, with the purpose of adopting some of the features of the program.

Many of the parents marvel at the zest with which the children attend, for the little people need scant urging after the first day. The earnest attention of the children is a matter of comment.

The daily program is as follows: 9 a. m., devotional exercises; call to worship; hymn; prayer; Lord's prayer; memory drill; habit or missionary talk by principal; hymn (without books); 9:45, pass to Bible classes at Baptist and Presbyterian churches. 10:15, dramatization of day's Bible story or study and map making of the land where Jesus lived. 11 o'clock, hand-work.

Each day's lesson groups about one central theme. Dramatization, hand-work, Bible verses, illustrate that theme. On the day the lesson was on Abraham, the boys and girls carved out of wood with coping saws and knives figurines of Abraham, Isaac, the ram, and on a mound of paper pulp, built an altar, grouping the painted figures about it.

Each of the junior boys and girls will make a map of Palestine, learning the events connected in Bible story with each city, lake and mountain. These maps will be very beautiful, and a permanent reminder of the happy summer in our Bible school.

A picnic is planned for the pupils for Friday, July 22, but of that later announcement will be made.

FUMIGATION BEGINS ON 4000 ACRES OF ORANGES

Fumigation crews have started work in the Redlands orange district and a score of units has been placed in the district and will fumigate about 4,000 acres this year. Other growers have been spraying and it is expected that the result will be the best clean-up in years for the district.

OWL FUMIGATING PLANT OPENS WITH LARGE FORCE

The Owl Fumigating Corporation of Azusa began active operation of its new plant for the season last week. It is understood that the prospects are that the season will be a very good one and that soon a large force of men will be engaged in the manufacture of the company's fumigant.

WHAT DO YOU KNOW ABOUT the Huntington Mutual Oil Company

And our Plan to Pay the Stockholders the Biggest Returns Possible?

DO YOU KNOW—

- we have some of the best Oil Land at Huntington?
- we are in the "middle of the Billion Dollar Pool?"
- we have $25,000 worth of machinery and equipment now on the ground, and that we have "spudded in?"
- that we have been offered $50,000 for our No. 1 lease, alone?
- that JESSE BERRY, President and manager, has had twenty-five years' experience drilling oil wells and handling oil properties, and that he is careful and conservative?
- that you are SAFE in the MUTUAL, and that your interests will be protected to the limit?
- that the controlling interest in the MUTUAL is owned by COVINA PEOPLE?

The business men and women, and residents of Covina and vicinity, have been visiting our property at Huntington Beach for the past ten days, and all are very enthusiastic over our locations. Mr. PERRY BASHORE, expert oil and water locator, pronounces our locations among the best in the beach field. He knows; we know he knows, and you know he knows. You all know him. He has been with you thirty-four years.

OUR PROMISE

WE PROMISED our stockholders to pay them all of the net proceeds from Well No. 1 in monthly dividends, beginning when the first oil is sold. We can do this because the management is only selling a small part of the capital stock, and we have a large amount of the treasury stock reserved for future development. Our paying from the first well will cause our stock to sell at several times its present price of 10c, to be used for our next well. Money is now coming in more freely, and we expect soon to have enough to complete our first well, after which no more 10c stock will be offered.

Signed, JESSE BERRY, Pres. and Mgr.

OPEN UP DECIDUOUS TREES.

One of the best things that deciduous growers can do at the present time, to help insure good crops for the next year, is to open up the trees by taking out large limbs, says the farm bureau. This is especially true for those orchards which do not have good crops this season. There are but few deciduous orchards which are open enough. The trees should be open sufficiently for sunlight to penetrate to all leaves. It will be a great benefit to take out some of those crowding limbs even though rather large holes are left. The limbs left will produce more fruit in years to come because fruit buds will be formed the full length of the limbs.

Buick predominance among business men means but one thing—Buick is absolutely dependable. It has proved its dependability for twenty years.

You don't need to try out a Buick for dependability. This is universally known. But you should try out a Buick to realize its comfort, its power, how easy it is to operate. There's real pleasure in driving a Buick.

ONLY A NOISY NUISANCE

Honor Capt. Douglas

thought that the body would not be recovered from the deep.

The entire memorial service was a spontaneous tribute on the part of the entire valley, the largest funeral ever held here, and an occasion that will be permanently written into local annals as one when the people intermingled their pride and sorrow, regret and grief and love for an heroic soldier gone on to join the ranks of the Great Army.

ADDRESS BY REV. COWGILL

There is nothing great but personal. There is nothing precious but human souls. An infant's death drapes the palace of a king in mourning. A stolen boy held by robbers for ransom arrests the attention of a nation, and Christendom bates its breath and prays until a lady missionary held by bandit mountaineers in the rocky fastness of a foreign land is restored to freedom. A commonwealth undertakes to rescue a surveyor famishing in the desert. If a child is rescued from the burning house, the parents weep for joy; but if the child is lost, all the wealth rewarding years of toil cannot all the void in aching hearts. If flood and fire and earthquake spare human life, men proceed with smiling faces to repair the material loss; but if lives are lost, the supreme touch of woe is added to calamity. A thousand million eager eyes are turned to the bulletins which report the sick statesman, the wounded president or the dying monarch, and when the great man dies, the flags of a nation fall to half mast, and cities hush the din of their toil to watch the funeral cortege in its progress to the grave.

Nothing but death will ever assemble the citizens of this beautiful valley, as they are assembled here, and touch them with that awe which hushes us into silence now. And it may be long before another funeral service commands so much attention. Since Howard Douglas walked these streets, an inconspicuous business man, with unsuspected capacities for public service and heroic action, he has become a distinguished soldier of the Republic. He answered his country's call in the day of need, and met the exacting manhood tests for the new and difficult and dangerous tasks of aviation. Faithfully and well he served his country in the air fleets that guided and protected the American sectors of the warring hosts of democracy, that shot to death a world menacing autocracy, and beat down the thrones of despots, and wrecked the imperial schemes of the German Caesar.

The great conflict for democracy in which Howard Douglas, along with the flower of American manhood in this generation, participated, and the issues of that conflict, will be the study of statesmen and philosophers, and the theme of artists, poets and historians for a thousand years. To have lived in such a time as this was a privilege which myriads of young men will envy in coming days, and to have participated efficiently and valiantly, in the tragic struggles and pregnant events of this world crisis, is glory enough for any man, living or dead. This opportunity came to Howard Douglas, and he used it well, and this honor crowns him now.

His civilian neighbors in this peaceful valley where he lived some uneventful years, and his comrades in the great war, especially those who shared with him and still must face the perils of the air, honor themselves today by their attention to this public servant, whose ashes, rescued from the water, have been carried far across the land for burial here, where those who knew him best and loved him most may come with tears and flowers to express the love that does not die in their hearts, and in the mystic and imperishable shrine of memory, to behold him still, as son and brother, citizen and soldier.

Here in California let his ashes rest, in this beautiful and wonderful land, where the tides ebb and flow and the breaking waves make music evermore, where the mountains take tribute from the clouds and pour down their living tides upon the plains to make them fruitful, where poppies herald spring and golden bells and vast sequoias whisper of eternity, where summers never die, and through all seasons, amid green leaves, the fruit hangs golden upon the bough; here in Covina valley, in Oakdale cemetery, at the foot of the green hills, across which the brown mountains look down, here, mid birds and flowers, let his ashes rest. Soldier of the Republic, Farewell.

But the word "Farewell" which we speak is not a word of despair. It does not imply finality, and contains no note of doom. It is a word of blessing, of benediction. It means fare well, go on prosperously, happily, successfully, blessedly. It does, indeed, mean loss and bereavement to us, but it is a word of hope and prophecy for him who leaves us. When we say farewell to the Christian soldier, we do not mean that he is mustered out of service, but that he is given something to do elsewhere, transferred to another department of service, or field of operation, promoted, it may be, to more important tasks and responsibilities.

Death does not mean a long sleep of the soul, it does not mean annihilation. It means the progression of the spirit to another state of existence, which God grants to spirits who are true to him and to the great ends of human life. The Christian soldier still has his place in God's universe, and lives his life and does his work under God's providence in that unseen and eternal order, without which our earthly life can have no large significance or full fruition. The part assigned to him over there we cannot know. Its importance we cannot measure, its thrill and its felicity we cannot guess. "For eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for those who love him." I held no faith which totally disavows the coming life from this, or rudely breaks the moral order and continuity of the universe of God. I do not think the problems and tragedies of the personal world are confined to this little planet and this brief life. I think the complex processes, the services and progress of a personal universe go forward in that life as in this, and that God has tasks for true and valiant spirits there, as here.

These visitations of death which gather us about the bier and lead us to the grave of those we love and honor, smite us with a sense of life's vanity and weakness. Whatever our earthly hope and ambition, all come to this at last.

But in the hour of our dismay we turn to our Infinite Friend. Our littleness takes refuge in the greatness of God. He is great enough for all our need. We turn our faces and stretch out our hands to Him, and say: "Our Father." Because he hath begotten us and we are his children, because he hath quickened us by his Spirit, we can discern his glory, we can trace his thoughts over after him, we can trace his doings for ages in rock ledge and star scroll, discern his constant purpose in the sweep of unbroken law, recognize his kindness in the bounty of the world, and appreciate the love that stoops down in the condescension of the cross to proclaim his pardoning mercy and undying affection for sinful men.

"Great God, our littleness takes heart to play Beneath the shadow of thy state; The only comfort of our littleness Is that thou art so great."

How doth thy hospitable goodness lie Outside us like a boundless sea; We cannot lose ourselves where all is home, Nor drift away from thee."

GALLANT RECORD

The eulogistic history delivered by ex-Chaplain Gentry in the cemetery contained the following statement of Capt. Douglas and of his military citations:

"Capt. Howard T. Douglas went into the great struggle as a private soldier in January of 1917, for, although war was not declared until April of that year, he was training with a coast artillery platoon at Covina during the winter before the declaration of war, and when the break came he went immediately to the officers' training camp at the Presidio, emerging from that camp as a first lieutenant of infantry with recommendations for immediate service. He was sent to Camp Lewis, but remained only a week, as orders came for him to attend the school of fire at Fort Sill, Okla. His stay there was short, and he was sent to the east, where he served for a short time as provost officer, but was soon sent overseas to serve with an aviation unit as infantry observation officer in the air. The briefest and best account of this gallant soldier's service in France is contained in the recommendation for the D. S. C. medal which he afterward received.

PROMOTION URGED

"From the headquarters of the third army corps in Germany on April 28, 1919, was sent a communication signed by Campbell King, chief of staff for Maj. Gen. J. L. Hines, recommending that Capt. Douglas be promoted to the rank of major. The communication said:

"This officer has served with the third corps air service ever since the corps entered the line, Aug. 4, 1918. He has successfully filled the positions of squadron group and corps air service operations officer, and from Jan. 20, 1919, to date, he has been acting corps air service commander. He served one and one-half months on the Verdun front with the French; five and one-half months with the American air service at the Toul front, and in Chaumont, Vesle, Aisne, Saint Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne operations. He has been sixteen months in the American Expeditionary Forces."

AGAIN RECOMMENDED

"On May 5, 1919, he was again recommended for promotion to major, and this significant paragraph was utilized by Maj. Gen. Hines.

"It is considered that the continued efficiency of that office requires that this officer be promoted for the best interest of the service, and not replaced by an officer of higher rank."

"Under the date of France, Jan. 30, 1919, Maj. K. P. Littauer, his immediate superior officer, wrote to the chief of air service, recommending the D. S. C. medal for Capt. Douglas, which he afterwards received. The communication stated:

"Serving in a position of great responsibility, this officer, while discharging the duties of squadron and group operations officer, persistently volunteered for and executed hazardous and difficult missions as airplane observer during the Meuse, Vesle, Saint Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne operations. He specialized in extremely low-flying infantry contact patrols, carrying out observations of our own and enemy troops' movements at altitudes ranging from ten to fifty meters, flying during violent artillery action in the track of trajectories, exposing himself to point-blank hostile machine-gun fire, most frequently volunteering for this kind of work. By his steady display of devotion and courage, Capt. Douglas set to the flying personnel operating under his direction an inspiring example. His work as a tactical executive was extraordinarily efficient and successful, and was at all times marked by extreme energy, conscientious application and intelligence. To his work as an observer he brought an exemplary spirit of self-sacrifice."

WORDS OF SUPERIORS

"These words as read are the words of the men who saw him in service and who made official report of his faithfulness, ability and courage. "Together with his brother, Gordon C. Douglas, lieutenant in the twenty-ninth engineering corps, he came home in the summer of 1918, having served in Europe since January, 1918. With the rank of captain, he entered the regular army with the aviation forces, and was stationed at Washington under Gen. Mitchell. He aided materially in writing the present aviation manual, and was closely connected with all activities of the aviation chief of staff. He directed a famous cross-country flight, and a flight into Alaska, made last year."

"BIBLE CLASS ENTERTAINED AT LUNCHEON BY LADIES

Members of the Gentry Bible class were entertained for their regular weekly luncheon this week by the Daughters of the King, the Sunday school class of Mrs. Elmer O. Thompson, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson on Cypress avenue. Forty-four men gathered for the luncheon, the number having gradually grown to this from twelve at the first session. Previous to this occasion the workers of the class had been meeting weekly on Tuesday evenings at Hotel Covina. After the ladies had served a delightful luncheon the class took up the business of the evening and made important plans. On the thirty-first of July the class will entertain the Masonic lodge and the entire program will be devoted to their work. This will be the first of a series of meetings which the class will hold for various orders. In September the young men of the class will present a play entitled "The Deceitful School," and the entire city will be invited. Arrangements are also being made to bring a famous religious film to the city for a Sunday program.

The class has voted to send a donation of ice cream to the children's camp in the mountains. On last Sunday evening a parade of motor cars with the name of the class on the windshields took place over the country, winding up at the union evening service. Thirty cars took part in the parade. Sunday marked the most remarkable session yet held, there being 104 men present for the morning service. It is confidently expected that the attendance will go to 250 in the fall.

APPRECIATION

We wish to express our heartfelt thanks for the manner in which this community honored the memory of our beloved son and brother, Howard T. Douglas. These observances so beautifully arranged by the American Legion, March Field, Fort McArthur, and the people of the city and valley, the floral remembrances from the air service, from fraternities and far-away friends, together with the wealth of flowers from immediate friends here, will ever be sweet memory to us. We wish you all to know how much we cherish these expressions of your love and sympathy in this time of our bereavement.

S. Douglas, Mr. and Mrs. Gordon C. Douglas, Miss Nellie Clark.

THORPES ARE VISITING CAPITALS OF EUROPE

The following letter is from Mr. B. F. Thorpe, who, with his wife, left last month on a European tour:

Hotel Weimar Rotterdam, Rotterdam, Le 24 June, 1921.

Tuesday night in London, Wednesday night in Ostend, Belgium, Thursday night in Rotterdam, Holland, Friday, Amsterdam; Saturday, Antwerp; Sunday, Brussels; Monday, Strasbourg, France—makes a traveler think he is seeing things, but distances are short here and cities close together.

England was "dry" as to weather—no rain for 92 days and water very scarce in London, but did not seem to have any perceptible effect on the booze supply.

There are twelve of us Americans in this party who do not use booze. The waiters all look disgusted when we call for water. In some places we can get it only by calling for Apollinaris water, which we dislike as it comes in stone jugs and is "made in Germany."

The census was being taken in London while we were there and we had to be enumerated, so I suppose my name will be in their next directory.

We tarried four short days in the world's largest city and saw many entertaining sights. Attended a fine church service at Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's Cathedral and heard some grand music both on the pipe organ and by the choir and soloists.

Had an automobile and good guide two days and drove all over the city of London from Whitechapel in the east end or slums to the fashionable west end, Hyde park, Houses of Parliament, London Tower, Buckingham palace, and other points of interest. Sunday evening we took dinner at the old Cheshire Cheese Inn, where Charles Dickens and Johnson and other famous authors met and did much of their writing. It is over 400 years old and is unchanged and very quaint.

We made a trip to Stratford-on-Avon, where we saw the home, school, church and theater of Shakespeare and Ann Hathaway's cottage, all extremely pretty and interesting, and refreshed one's interest in his remarkable writings.

Oxford university and its wonderful buildings were of great interest also and well worth seeing. The dining hall and kitchens were of particular interest.

The agricultural sections of Belgium and Holland are far superior to the farms of Scotland and England in crop production. I never saw such wonderful crops of grain, potatoes, peas, clover, beets. The production must be about three times greater than our California crops per acre. Everything is most intensively cultivated and fertilizers used freely.

These two countries both look very prosperous, and there are very few idle men. At Ostend we saw our first evidence of the war's ravages, and it must have been very severe, although it is surprising to see how much has been rebuilt and restored in the short time since the armistice was signed.

are all more modern and set better tables than any in Great Britain. At this hotel we have a large room facing on a canal and a fine bath attached. Also an elevator, which is not common here.

The dog is a useful animal here—helps draw the big carts full of vegetables, milk and other produce. Also there are many oxen and a few cows hitched to heavy loads, but they were not breaking the speed limit.

The war used up much of the horse supply and their scarcity is quite noticeable.

This city of Rotterdam is very interesting with its numerous canals, not unlike Venice, and busy with commerce. There are many cafes with tables on the sidewalks and people sitting there sipping their beer and watching the passing crowds. Most of the old wooden shoe population has given way to modern dressed people not unlike a crowd in any metropolitan American city. Shops with window full of tempting goods marked in plain figures. We have had to learn four systems of money, and here it is all guilders as a standard—about three to one of our dollars. However, our money seems to speak all languages, and we have no trouble at all in spending it anywhere.

We are going to some of the small fishing villages in the north of Holland today, and from there to Switzerland. Yesterday we were in the famous Palace of Justice in Brussels, Belgium, where Edith Cavell, the English nurse, was tried, condemned and executed by the Germans.

We start out about 9:30 every morning and it is one continual round of sightseeing until 11 at night most every day—sometimes on a train, often by boat, but usually by automobile.

Americans are over here in force and the hotels and shopkeepers welcome them and their fat purses.

The roads are splendid everywhere, but very narrow. Many Americans have their own cars here touring Europe. Gasoline is very high—75 cents per gallon in many places, and 60 cents the cheapest we have seen. It is called "motor spirit" here at the garages. No service stations yet, but saw one being built in London.

B. F. THORPE.

INTEREST IS AROUSED IN PROPOSED ROADS

Interest in Covina has again been aroused in the proposed extension of Citrus avenue through the hills to the Pomona boulevard, connecting this part of the valley directly with the road through Brea canyon to the beach towns. There is quite a little talk of petitioning the board of supervisors to have this work included in proposed road work.

A direct route to Pomona, south of Covina, following somewhat the lines of what is known as the old hill road past the old Chapman and Biggins ranches is also proposed. A road south from Badillo street to the hills and following the hills to Ganesha park is also a project that is receiving attention. It is felt by interested people that these roads would bring a great deal of the travel from the east end of the county through Covina, especially from Pomona to Pasadena.

The Uses of Money

The way a man uses money—makes it, saves it, spends it—is perhaps one of the best tests of character.

Money should not be regarded as the principal end of life, nor should it be regarded with contempt, for it represents to a great extent the means of mental and physical comfort.

A little self-sacrifice, and a determination to use your money right (by saving it) will soon accumulate a snug balance to your credit.

Keep Up Your Morale

The Covina valley in the middle of the summer is warm, and invites everyone to let down a peg or two. And most of us accept the invitation.

Summer somnolence is felt the world over. Business will not move forward with that rush and verve of the fall and winter. It never has—it never will.

What we should do at the present time, however, is to keep legitimate business from getting away from this valley, for it is not good policy to allow the people of this valley to turn their attention elsewhere, because what they do in the summer might become a habit in the winter. Those who go away for the summer should be linked up with their home-town stores by parcels post. Several merchants are doing this, with good results.

There is this good thing to bear in mind—that this valley is more prosperous right now, and is doing more business than any similar locality in the state, to say nothing of the middle west and east, where business has been quiet for some time. Business is good here by comparison.

The lemon growers are getting prices now that are almost as high in money as the prices received during the war, and they have not the amount of cultural cost in this crop that they had in the war crops. The Valencia market is very satisfactory, and will probably be better. The walnut crop for the whole state is estimated as somewhat larger than last year. This estimate comes from the California Walnut Growers' Association, and is in contradiction to the idea that prevailed a few months ago concerning the injury of the crop by frost.

Building in the city and valley is quite active. Lumber prices and general building materials have dropped appreciably. It is a good time to build. There is every indication that the country is to emerge from the after-war cloud. Six months from now we will be exporting heavily. Resumption of trade abroad on a big scale means the starting of the wheels of manufacture and trade.

Things look good for the future—let's keep up the morale.

S. O. S.—"SAVE OUR SCHOOLS"
The Smith-Towner Bill—What It Will Do and What It Will Not Do.

It provides $7,500,000 for the removal of illiteracy.

Seven million, five hundred thousand dollars for the Americanization of the foreign-born.

Twenty million dollars for physical education, including health education and sanitation.

Fifteen million dollars for the preparation of public school teachers.

Fifty million dollars for equalizing educational opportunities in the states. To avail themselves of federal aid, the states must appropriate equal amounts.

1. The removal of illiteracy is of immediate and major importance. Illiteracy among negroes is a tremendous problem, but there are one million more white illiterates than there are negro illiterates. These illiterates are often of splendid character and the highest order of intelligence. Their illiteracy not only imposes upon them limited experience and a low standard of life, but imposes upon the country enormous economic loss. From 1900 to 1910 the number of illiterates in New York state increased by 87,000.

2. The appropriation for the Americanization of the foreign-born is sorely needed. Hundreds of thousands of immigrants who are intensely loyal are nevertheless the victims of anti-American propaganda and un-American principles and ideas because of lack of specific education in Americanism. Despite their good intent they constitute not only a problem but a danger.

3. The appropriation for physical education is of the highest importance. These ailments which render adults subnormal physically are usually of a character which could be easily and permanently corrected during the years of school age. Left neglected until manhood or womanhood they become practically irremediable, causing a loss to the country of vast military and economic values.

4. If the public school system is to be saved, better preparation of teachers is essential. The conditions of the war period have greatly increased the pressing nature of this necessity. Four-fifths of the total number of our public school teachers have not had two years of special training, the minimum recognized standard in other civilized countries. Thirty thousand public teachers have no education beyond the eighth grade. The average salary paid to teachers last year was $640.

5. Educational opportunities must be equalized if the nation is really to be thoroughly unified, and the problems of living are to be adequately dealt with. Sparsely settled communities cannot properly educate American citizens without help from the centers of greater population. The country boy has a two months' shorter school year than the city boy, and frequently very inefficient instruction. Farmers will continue to leave the country and go to the city if this condition continues. At present the poorest schools are in the poorest communities—just where the best schools are needed.—Southern California White Ribbon.

SAN DIMAS LEMON ASSN. IN RECORD SHIPMENTS

The San Dimas Lemon Association has just passed through what is probably the largest and busiest month since the organization came into existence eleven years ago.

The lemon packing house receipts for the month were the largest it ever had and there were shipped during the month 100 cars which is approximately one-eighth of the year's output, the estimate for the season being 850 cars, which will be the largest amount shipped in any one year.

The picking of such a large quantity of fruit was a large undertaking and was in general charge of Herman Jones, who had under his supervision at one time 280 pickers in the field. His part in the large month's business was handled efficiently and well. The picking totaled 107,658 boxes.

Shipments are going forward at the rate of about six cars a day and are finding a somewhat stronger market.

The weather back east has been exceptionally warm, several places reporting the highest temperatures in fifty years, which has made an enormous demand for lemons with consequent high prices.—San Dimas Press.

BALDWIN PARK IN REBUKE TO COVINA

The Baldwin Park Bulletin, in commenting on the failure of the high school bonds to carry, administers a well-merited rebuke to Covina as follows:

The old political feud, which was the main thing in deciding the result, so far as many of the voters were concerned, particularly in Covina, had developed so strongly that there was little or no hope that the bonds would carry. So strong was this feeling here that only thirty-eight voters took the trouble to vote. It was in the busy season, and the voters were too disgusted with the tactics of the Covina contingent who oppose the bonds to waste any time going to the poles. If the voters prefer to pay about $15,000 as a special tax levy, all in a bunch in their taxes next year, instead of about $9,000, and having it invested in their own improvements, instead of paying it out in rent and extra teachers (for rented rooms at a distance from the main buildings mean extra teachers and needless expense), we will all join in the new way of operating a high school.

Whatever the future result may be, it is to be regretted that the foolish feuds of men must enter into our schools and jeopardize the best interests of the boys and girls who now need the best educational advantages they can be given.

Story Is Told of Aviator's Death in Chesapeake Bay

On the return of Summerfield Douglas and Gordon C. Douglas, father and brother of Captain Howard T. Douglas, who arrived with the body of the aviator on the train reaching Azusa at seven o'clock Monday morning, it was learned from them that Captain Douglas was alive when he struck the water after the collision and that he came to the surface and seemed to wave his hands at one of the aviators in the air above him.

This information was received from one of the air service lieutenants who flew over the place where the planes fell. While the body of Lieutenant M. J. Plumb, who was killed with Captain Douglas at the same time, was found in his plane when the two locked planes were grappled out of the bay on the day following the accident, the body of Captain Douglas was not in his plane. He had succeeded in unstrapping himself, and according to the witness in the air, came to the surface, but must have sunk almost immediately. Captain Douglas was an expert swimmer, but he may have been injured during the collision in the air, or have been injured by striking the water. It was stated that the two planes were about seven hundred feet above the water when the collision took place. Captain Douglas was also handicapped by heavy clothing and boots, which he had no time to divest.

The first report, given out by the Associated Press, that the immediate locality where the planes fell was afterwards bombed with heavy TNT, was proven erroneous, as air service officers stated that the scout plane ahead of the coming formation of planes turned back on seeing the fall of the aviators and checked the advance of the bombing squadron.

HIS LAST ORDERS.
 Among the papers and effects of the dead aviator was found his last orders from the chief of staff, in the form of a letter of introduction to the captain of the United States vessel, Shawmut, which was the official vessel of observation of the bombing practice. Captain Douglas had been sent by the air service as liaison officer between the air service and the navy, and was to be stationed on the Shawmut. On the day before his death he remained on the Shawmut, and made a report of the day's events, which was found in the clothing which he had left at the hangar on land.

The day of his death Captain Douglas was piloting a pursuit plane, and observing the work of the bombing squadron. His associates say that it was ever his practice to get into the thick of operations in order to learn by actual participation as much as possible of the work. The actual cause of the collision has not been determined, as other aviators only state that they saw the planes clinging to each other.

DEATHS HALT FLYING.
 For three days following the tragedy the squadrons did not go up in the air, out of respect to these brave aviators who had met death in the line of duty. Brig-Gen. Mitchell, assistant chief of air service, who was an intimate friend and superior officer of Captain Douglas, commanded a squadron of planes on the third day that flew over Chesapeake bay in the locality of the accident, and flowers were dropped upon the waves. It was thought at that time that the body of the Covina aviator would not be recovered.

In Washington the father and brother of the aviator found the entire air service mourning for Captain Douglas. Congressman Elston of Northern California, who for more than a year after Captain Douglas came back from Europe was a room-mate of the aviator, was one whose grief was most poignant. From fellow-aviators, and from the office force of the headquarters came expressions of grief. General Menoher, chief of air service, placed everything at the command of the relatives.

FLIGHT TO TANGIER.
 The father and brother wished to go to Langley field in Virginia from Washington and talk with those who had been with Captain Douglas at the time of the accident, but they found that the boats from Washington to Chesapeake bay were overcrowded, and that bookings were taken a month ahead. The train service also was slow on account of the exodus from Washington of summer vacationists, and when the situation was presented to General Menoher by brother officers of the dead aviator, the air service placed a huge Martin bombing plane at the disposal of the father and brother, and the round trip was made in this great ship of the air.

The journey of 140 miles was made at the rate of about 90 miles an hour, the Covina men said. They flew over the bay and over Tangier island, where the body was found, and landed at Langley field. On the trip back they circled over the bay and over the sunken wreck of the San Marcos, formerly the battleship Texas, which was the bombing target that the aviators were attempting to sink at the time of the collision.

This gigantic bombing plane is one that may carry twelve persons and huge weights in ammunition. The Covina men rode in the enclosed car, and said they scarcely felt any motion, although travelling at an incredible rate of speed. The plane is equipped with two engines each having eight hundred horse-power, so that the roar of the tremendous machine made it necessary to write all communications to the pilot. The plane was driven by Lieut. Bissell, the aviator who brought the body of Captain Douglas to Washington.

RECOVERY OF BODY.
 The report of Clayton Bissell, first lieutenant of the air service, on the manner in which the body of Captain Douglas was recovered, is of interest to the friends of the dead aviator. Under the date of July 2, he reported as follows:
 "Pursuant to verbal orders from the commanding officer, first provisional air brigade, the undersigned made preparations to proceed from Langley field, Va., to Tangier island in order to identify the body of a man which had been washed ashore at that point and believed to be that of Captain Douglas. Instructions issued at the time were to proceed to Tangier island, view the body, and if found to be that of Captain Douglas, to proceed with it to Washington and turn the body over to the Walter Reed hospital.

Left Langley field by seaplane at 2:30 p. m., July first, and arrived at Tangier at 4 p. m. The undersigned proceeded immediately to the body and identified it as that of Captain Douglas. The body could have been identified by the boots, breeches and coveralls, but in addition to these the heel of the right boot which had been pulled off was found missing, and the laundry marks on the clothing contained his name and private markings. Several papers bearing his name, his pipe and keys were also taken from the body.

At this time the body was in a crude, wooden box covered over in the best manner possible, and with an American flag and some flowers placed on the outside of the box. It was found to be impossible to get the casket aboard the seaplane, so it was necessary to transfer the body to a wire litter, which had been carried for this purpose. The body was placed aboard the seaplane, and lashed into position so it could not possibly move in flight or upon landing. When this had been done the undersigned went to the shore again and interviewed all parties, reducing their testimony to writing and procuring signatures in each case. From this testimony, which shows no conflict at any point, the following is evident:

That the body was discovered about three o'clock, June 29; that it was towed ashore by a yacht and turned over to John Shore, the local undertaker of Tangier; that he kept it until the arrival of the undersigned.

YACHT TOWS BODY.
 The report gives an account by the Tangier undertaker, in which he says that a yacht landed at Tangier pier which has been to the west shore of the bay, and the men aboard stated that as they passed the Tangier light, the keeper waved to them and reported that the body of a dead man was floating near the light, and requested them to pick the man up as the keeper could not get his boat down. They asked the undertaker to take the body and he accepted it.

Lieut. Bissell continues in his report to say that he flew with the body in the seaplane from Tangier island to Washington, D. C., where the plane was met by an ambulance at Bolling field, and transferred to the Walter Reed hospital.

RECORD OF AVIATOR IS WRITTEN BY COMRADES

The following is from the Air Service News Letter, the publication issued daily by that branch of service in Washington, and gives a very comprehensive account of the tragedy that resulted in the death of Captain Howard T. Douglas, and also reviews his remarkable record:

As the result of an airplane accident near the wreck of the old San Marcos, formerly the battleship Texas, when their two single-seated pursuit planes collided during the bombing maneuvers off the Virginia capes on June 22, Capt. Howard T. Douglas, A. S., and Lieut. Marle J. Plumb, A. S., were drowned.

In the death of these gallant young officers, who were among the most able and efficient in the air service, the army has sustained a most serious loss. Capt. Douglas was a member of the board of observers appointed to witness and report on the naval ordnance tests to be held in the vicinity of Langley field from June 21 to July 20, 1921. It was while performing this duty that the plane which he was piloting was struck by the plane piloted by Lieut. Plumb, who was ascending after having released a bomb at the target below. The collision caused both planes to fall in a damaged condition into the water, both officers drowning before assistance could reach them.

Captain Douglas' original commission, May 1, 1917, was with the infantry; served with 91 and 35 divisions, 2nd and 4th French armies, 5th and 3rd U. S. army corps, 88th aero squadron. Transferred to air service Dec. 31, 1918, trained as aerial observer. Ft. Sill, Oklahoma, and at Amanty, France; on service at front from April 8, 1918, to Nov. 11, 1918; in Aisne-Marne, St. Mihiel and Meuse-Argonne offensives; 3rd army in Germany to June, 1919; rated airplane pilot June 2, 1919; recommended for D.S.M. Jan. 30, 1919; promoted to captain March 20, 1919; recommended for major May 3, 1919; office chief of air service July, 1919-Sept., 1920. Officer in charge New York to San Francisco reliability test. Pathfinder of Alaskan flying expedition, preceding the flight by rail and making all arrangements regarding landing fields and supplies; commissioned captain regular army Sept. 20, 1920; G. H. Q. citation; three gold war service chevrons; born at Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, Oct. 1, 1887; graduate of university of California; Captain Douglas was unmarried and his father, Summerfield Douglas, resides at Covina, Calif.

TRIBUTE OF COMRADES.
 The air service lost one of its most valuable officers when Captain Howard T. Douglas was drowned. He was not only an able pilot, but served throughout the war as an airplane observer, and, at the time of his death, held both the rating of airplane pilot and airplane observer.

Shortly after the declaration of war, Douglas joined the army and volunteered for aviation duty. Upon completion of his training in this country as an aerial observer, he was sent to France where, after a short course of instruction, he was sent to the front as an observer with a French observation squadron. Because of the excellent type of work he carried on while there, he was shortly recalled with the American forces, and assigned to the 88th aero squadron, just prior to the Chateau Thierry operations. He served throughout the remainder of the war with the American forces—for a time as aerial observer with the 88th, then as operations officer and later as group operations officer. When the troops moved to Coblenz, just after the armistice, Douglas was sent with them, and for a time prior to his return to the United States, the duties of which although according to tables of organization, call for the rank of colonel, were performed by Douglas with the rank of captain.

Throughout this period he proved himself to be an officer possessed of an excellent sense of duty and of the greatest courage and ability.

Upon his return to the United States, because of his marked ability and of his broad experience overseas, he was assigned to staff duty in the office of the chief of air service in Washington, in which duty he was still acting up to the time of his death.

Because of his eminent fitness for the difficult undertaking, he was made the pathfinder of the Alaskan flying expedition, preceding Capt. St. Clair Street and his brother officers for the purpose of blazing the trail in the choosing and the preparation of landing fields. A great deal of credit has been given Captain Douglas in connection with the successful completion of this hazardous undertaking because of his excellent work in preparation for the flight and in arranging for the care of the personnel and of the planes throughout the expedition.

LAST ASSIGNMENT.
 His last assignment in the operations division of the air service included the working up of a great deal of the details of the bombing project now being carried on at Langley field, in which he had taken the keenest interest. During the maneuvers he was assigned for duty as liaison officer between the army air service and the officer in charge of the air forces of the Atlantic fleet, and his last flight was made for the purpose of keeping himself entirely familiar with the progress of the whole project.

The army as a whole, the air service of the army, and the officers individually who were fortunate enough to know Captain Douglas as an officer and as a man, feel deeply the unfortunate accident. The excellent characteristics of this officer and the example he set will remain in the memory of those he has left behind.

THE SILENT HOMESTEAD.

California Cultivator: Except for song of bird and ripple of waterfall the homestead is silent, the voice of the maker will never return; for this fine country home near Glendora, Los Angeles county, was the property of the late Charles Silent, a pioneer settler of Los Angeles. Since the death of the owner no one but caretakers are there, the gates are locked and large signs proclaim "Closed to the public." Two members of the Cultivator staff, with G. P. Rixford, physiologist, United States bureau of plant industry, recently visited this noted foothill country place and found easy entrance. The public are excluded only because some of them do not seem to be aware that the property was not designed for them to prey upon at will. Not alone flowers, but oranges, avocados and other tropical fruits have been ruthlessly stripped from the trees, the latter sometimes being broken down by vandals climbing far for the last unlawful prize in the form of a ripe avocado, cherimoya or sapote.

The place is one of surpassing loveliness. One hilltop has been flattened to a level greensward, supported by terrace walls of Glendora purplish brownstone, the crest enclosed by noble specimens of the beautiful Cocos plumosa palms. At one end is an "outdoor" rustic dining pavilion, and at the rear a number of tiny palm thatched cottages, each containing living room, sleeping room and bath. About these buildings grow begonias, fuchsias and other decorative flowering plants in almost tropical luxuriance, thriving as they seldom do at lower altitudes. Over the buildings and arbors clamber such rare plants as the Copa de Oro, or Cup of Gold (Solandra guttata of the botanist), the huge golden chalcas as large as tencups and quite similar in form. With this species is also growing one having large bell shaped flowers of white, Solandra grandiflora. All about are palms, bamboos, glens filled with ferns of many species, hillsides covered with flowering yuccas, the whole scene one of unusual garden splendor, cared for as in the days when the plant loving owner lavished his affections upon each favored subject. For out of the wilderness Judge Silent wrought, much of this loveliness with his own hands.

Stone enclosed roadways wind about the 400 acres, skirted on either side by subtropical fruit trees. There is nearly a mile of avocados marking the roadway's course through the more somber orange groves, and a majority of these seem to be of the Dickinson variety, now loaded with ripening purple fruits. On one main road the avocados are alternated first by a white sapote (Casimiroa edulis), and next by the Queensland nut (Macadamia ternifolia), both now in fruits about half grown. Feijoa and other guavas, carissas, cherimoyas, and a considerable variety of tropical fruiting shrubs complete the border plantation about this beautiful building site from which may be seen the mountains in the background, the broad orchard covered valley in front, and beyond the round topped San Jose hills that divide it from the Pomona valley on the other side. To the east the view is extensive toward San Bernardino and westward toward Los Angeles and the sea.

SUCCESS.

It's doing your job the best you can, And being just to your fellow man; It's making money, but holding friends, And staying true to your aims and ends;

It's figuring how and learning why, And looking forward and thinking high, And dreaming a little and doing much; It's keeping always in closest touch; With what is finest in word and deed; It's being thorough, yet making speed; It's daring blithely the field of chance While making labor a brave romance; It's going onward despite defeat And fighting staunchly, but keeping sweet.

It's being clean and it's playing fair; It's laughing lightly at Dame Despair; It's looking up at the stars above, And drinking deeply of life and love; It's struggling on with the will to win, But taking loss with a cheerful grin; It's sharing sorrow, and work, and mirth, And making better this good old earth; It's serving, striving through strain and stress,

It's doing your noblest—that's Success.—From Marine Trust News, published by the Marine Trust Co. of Buffalo.

A MULE SKINNER'S TRACTOR PHILOSOPHY

By Walter H. Gardner
Orchard and Farm
Nor whip, nor goad, nor ridicule
Will raise a hair on stubborn mule;
Yet—search him with a vicious oath—
The beast will lose a year's growth!

But tractors are of tempered steel,
And neither listen, sweat nor fell.
To lash them with profanity,
I hold is an insanity!

An empty radiator's fizz
Provokes, perhaps, a mild "Gee
Whiz!"

For "some one" let the thing go dry.
(That one, I know too well, was I!)

And when the tortured pistons wheeze,
I should be called a hunk o' cheese!
For tractors, oil-less, always halt—
The motor should not bear the fault!

The mule, it always seemed to me,
Appreciated profanity;
But when the tractor's halt and lame,
The driver usually is to blame.

And if a mule decides to balk,
He quite deserves expressive talk;
But when the ungoverned pinions burst,
'Tis I who should be roundly cursed!

SAN GABRIEL RIVER IS HIGHER THAN IN YEARS

Superintendent Glenn Harnish of the Covina Irrigating Company says that the season so far has been a very good one from the standpoint of gravity water from the canyon. The late rains in May caused the upper canyons to continue to run and fill the main river with a volume that has not been seen in years at this time of year. A rapid decrease in the flow is expected in the coming summer months, as is always the case, but so far the company has not been put to much expense in pumping.
